house in which she lives, and although her children had endeavored to persuade her to sell and move to Mahanoy City, where she has relatives, she will not consent.

The Widow Carroll and her three children live on Broad street, in Tanamaqua. She keeps a small, old-fashioned tavern, called "The Home," from the swinging sign over the sidewalk to the rear of the place. "The Home" is as bright and clean as a pin. The floor of the bar-room is as white as soap and water can make it, and wats with insnumerable china ornaments, pots of flowers and cheap engravings the place presents a highly attractive appearance.

Mrs. Carroll is a stout, well-preserved woman of forty or thereabouts. Her eldest daughter, a girl of fourteen, is very pretty. Mrs. Carroll looks upon taking away of Mr. Carroll, quite philosophically.

"He was an excellent man," she said, "and I missed him sadly for a long time, but I soon discovered that fretting wouldn't feed my babies."

Rumor has it that Mrs. Carroll was married to a well-to-do man, but she smilingly declines to say whether the story is true or not.

The wife and two children of Jimmy Kerrigan, "the Queener," are living in Tanamaqua, while Kerrigan is confined in the county jail, having been nearly everyone that knows him. Miss Higgins, Kerrigan's siswithin this State, was introduced in the House and quietly passed, with a few votes against it, on the basis of expediency. It is highly probable that a title and general in his character, neglected no attention, and went to the Committee on Railroads, when it discovered to be a bill specially introduced to enable the Pennsylvania Railroad to take possession of so much of the Central Ohio Railroad as is between cities of Newark and Columbus, a distance of thirty-three miles.

It is known as the Columbus and Newark Division, and is owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad. Ohio roads are few in common. The Baltimore & Railroad Company is the sole lessee of the Central Ohio road from Bellairs to Newark, and the lessee of the undivided between Newark and Columbus, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company and Baltimore & Ohio Companies operate the road in common, it being the only between the last named points.

It appears that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company is about to establish a branch line from the Fairless Creek Junctions through Newark to Wheeling, and thence by the Hempfield road to Pittsburgh, in order to extend its coke and iron traffic from that section to Cincinnati and other Western points.

It is the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has also passenger and traffic arrange-

The circular gave notice that five million of these bonds would be redeemed on the fourth instant in the order of their presentation. The issue of five million of bonds presented since the issue of the bonds is only $635,000. The other bonds to be redeemed are those held by the State of New York, amounting to $2,205,000, which were surrendered for redemption with interest to date for payment several days before the circular was issued. The above mentioned facts are construed by the officials of the Treasury Department as indicating that the reported stringency in the money market was more fictitious than real.
